HUNTERS FLOOD

If you've ever wondered how much Hunters floods in the winter, check out these photos taken by Craig Picinich. They were taken at the gate. It's flooded clear up to the little hump just before the pitts. The water is clear over to the tree line that's next to the river. Luckily the start stands were moved up next to the roller and didn't get washed away.

UW DESIGN TEAM

Yesterday the UW design, build, fly team came to Sanderson field to test their contest entry for 2022. The parameters of the contest are:

1. The plane must take off in 25'
2. Fly the pattern with a 360° turn
3. Land and deploy a 1/2lb package without tripping a shock sensor.
4. Repeat 5 times.

The plane has a trap door in the bottom and a conveyor system that moves the little boxes to the back for deployment and then centers the remaining boxes on the CG.

While getting the plane ready to fly a coyote wandered down the runway right towards us, pretty unusual!

The plane had no problem taking off in 25' and flew very well.

They did have a problem with one of the speed controls and had to replace it.

We had a few rain showers and the plane got pretty wet which led to some issues. The alternate pilot got a turn at flying and the motors cut out on him. He landed safely and after some trouble shooting he tried again but the problem wasn't solved and it happened again, this time on take off and he was able to get it back down but broke all the landing gear.

They were a nice bunch of kids and did a great job of designing a plane to fill the parameters of the contest.

I wish them luck!
